STATEMENT

The current body of work is titled "Atmospheric" reflecting changes in air and light.

They are expressions of the ephemeral conceivably transporting the viewer standing before them and becoming as elusive as air.

The work encompasses the elements that define what is thought to be components of the natural world: sky, land, water, trees, air, and fire.

The paintings may seem paradoxical to the viewer, more like dreams or hallucinations than reality. Visual deceptions and symbols of psychological states appear and reappear. The landscapes and abstractions are artificial recalling a moment in time and place that may have occurred in a dream and may never return again. The use of ambiguous perspective and sights in nature create the "idea" of nature rather than precisely depicting what is seen, which can appear unsettling or disconcerting, yet compelling. They create a visceral sensation of the experience rather than pictorial representation. This is an idealized view of nature that is ever-changing moment to moment due to the global conditions of our environment.

Because of the world of technology, nature appears to belong to the past these days. Now that the entire world has become man-made, nature has been set apart in national parks where it has become like social ornament — a backyard garden in theory if not in size.

The paintings show a sense of longing for what has or may be lost, as well as celebrating the mystery and beauty that exists.
